The Dam was proposed in 1952 to the Tribunal Regional das Ilhas (TRI), a predecessor of the current Instituto da Área de Proteção Ambiental (IPA), to supply the central geographic region with clean drinking water and irrigation, to be used for the reforestation of the island, and to eliminate the need of using the currents of the Rio Formigal as a source for the water. In addition, the Dam was proposed as a means of electrical power generation, with the construction of hydroelectric power plants on the dam crest. It was finally approved on January 8, 1964, even being awarded with the Blue Flag by the Açores Regional Government. Construction was started in 1965, by Angra's Factory in Terceira. The first phase, of 5 metres, was finished in 1967, followed by the second, of 55 metres, in 1973. They achieved the first generation in 1976, where they supplied 1 MW, and 3 million cubic metres of water per day. In the next years, they had more generation units, first at 2 MW, and then, in 1993, at 5 MW, soon followed by another 5 MW, and another 6 MW in 2002.

Transverse electromagnetic (TEM) modes are modes of a line in which the line is divided up into sections and the electromagnetic field has a dipole distribution. For example, a TEM mode of a line with a diameter d and a height H can be expressed as:  $T = A \sin^2$
